

From: Kurtis Viehdorfer
To: Comments, Public
Subject: FINRA Regulations
Date: Friday, May 6, 2022 10:13:30 AM

WARNING: External Sender! Exercise caution with links, attachments and requests for login information.

Hello,

As an investor, I wanted to say that I really think the "day trade" regulations are a little unfair to working people and the account restrictions at the number of $25,000 are truly arbitrary and are actually completely unnecessary. I could understand the desire to have impulse control on people who are new to investing, but for people who truly want to learn to day trade or learn investing in general, it is WAY too high of a barrier to entry.

The only thing your regulations have made me do is change brokers, which doesn't necessarily restrict me as much, but really sucks for the viability of the sustainability of my normal broker.

These rules ^[REDACTED] and I think many people at FINRA know ^[REDACTED]

Kurt Viehdorfer