To whom it may concern,

I am a retail investor, and have seen a lot of manipulation in the market due to the loop wholes and ridiculously low fines for institutions. The issue is how they are self reporting, using the dark pools, which retail does not have the ability to do. I've seen several stocks with great news and get shorted. Even with fail to deliver their time lines which they can just pay a small fine instead of covering.

It would help if FINRA makes it where you know the short interest daily where it's not just self reporting and they use call options to hide their short position.

Sincerely
Will Cervera
